I'm not exactly sure how the original of JVB's voter registration form came into my possession, but before I return it to JVB I will append this copy (preceding page) to this record. What I appear to be doing is writing my autobiography and a biography of John at the same time that I am writing a history of Carbondale, and that is why such documents as that given on the preceding page interest me so.

From one to nine P.M. I spent at the NEWS, working on the final production of their week's paper. I will have two stories on page one plus a "Just for the Record" in this paper. I had to spend some time correcting typos in the two page one articles and in typing the "Just for the Record" column. I insist that my articles have, if possible, no typos. Certainly I earned my salary this week -- eight hours of production work today. At about 7:15 P.M. JVB arrived: he went by the Library and discovered that it was open, and decided to wait until it was closed before beginning work. I can understand that he might not want to be seen by some of his colleagues at work in his custodial capacity at the CPL. I will work along with him and teach him that it does not matter "what" you do, rather it is "how" you do it that counts. One of these days, perhaps tomorrow, I will convince John to begin work at, say, 7 P.M., and I will work along with him in the presence of Anne Muldown and/or other librarians, and they shall know with whom they are dealing.

At about 7:40 P.M., JVB went down to the CPL and in the course of the following hour and twenty minutes JVB telephoned me twice at the NEWS -- once, just to chat, and once to tell me that Jean Colville had called me at the CPL and wanted me to call her before 10 P.M. -- it appears that her father owns the Morris family Bible and she has persuaded him that he should donate it to the CHS & M. I did not have the strength to call her C.I. son and will do so tomorrow. She apparently called at John's house looking for me. Bless her heart, she really is persistent. At about 7 P.M. I telephoned out to Brookvale to get the report on Russell -- HLRP and Cousin Peg went down to Hershey to matin.
